

Sebastian Barretto

Hello! My name is Sebastian Barretto, and I am from Orange, California. I attended Canyon High School, and I have a younger sister who is currently there. I also have an older brother who is attending UCSD. Outside of school, I enjoy playing and listening to music.

I started growing an interest in ECE in middle school when I joined the Science Olympiad team. I competed in an event called Circuit Lab. At the beginning I had some guidance from my coach, but later on I started self-studying. Learning about how circuits work and playing around with components was pretty fun. Later on I worked with an Arduino microcontroller and built a remote-control lamp for my room. These experiences influenced me the most in pursuing ECE.

I chose the ECE program at UCLA because UCLA is a good school and it's close to home. Being on campus has been pretty nice, although the first couple weeks my legs were really sore from walking.

I don't have enough experience to really know what career path I want to take, but I am still excited to explore what the field has to offer.
